MISTER

COLEMAN FLYING SCHOOL LTD.

I - Belong to - "Monk" Watson

I've risen on wings 'till the land below
Lies hidden there 'neath the haze,
And the arc of my prop gleams in the sun;
Herds of cloudlets meet my gaze.

I've come to love this process of flight,
And the thrills are mine to hold,
But they're priceless now in my country's
Since the war drums have been rolled.

O God, give me strength and guide my aim;
May my fire find the mark
To do my part to help free the world
Of those maniacs raving and stark.

John A. Weber

Our Instructors

As we look back upon our past experiences in the service, we realize the importance of good leadership and guidance. Thoughts about our former instructors, and what we learned through them, show us more clearly how much we really owe them.

When, in the future, the great majority of us receive those coveted wings, and proceed to combat duty, we will fully realize that the best friend we had was our first instructor, who carried us through Primary. To him we owe everything, for he taught us how to fly—the slow, painstaking process of demonstrating and helping us through the precise maneuvers of military aviation. It was he who gave us the incentive to keep trying when we thought all hope was gone.

So it is to our flight instructors, our best friends, that we dedicate this book.

COMMANDING OFFICER....

ARMY AIR FORCES CONTRACT PILOT SCHOOL (PRIMARY)

Coleman Flying School, Ltd..
Coleman, Texas,
5 November 1943.

To the Class of 44-D:

In the past nine weeks you have accomplished a very small, though very important, part of the training required to mold a military pilot. You have been instructed to a highly proficient degree in the finest flying technique, unequaled anywhere in the world. My advice to you now is that you pay great respect to every detail throughout your training, however inconsequential it may seem at that moment, thus learning and becoming not only fine pilots, but superior officers. May you continue the excellent start you have begun at this field.

Ground school, composed of engines, meteorology, theory of flight, and navigation, was an integral part of the curriculum at primary. These subjects were given us with the knowledge that they will be of particular value to us in the near future.

In Memoriam... T.W. SANFORD - FLIGHT INSTRUCTOR

So be it, when our deeds are done;
So be it—when death has come.
Let all men look upon his face,
And think back long in memory's grace.

Remember now, the men who fly;
Remember too, the way they die.
'Tis not in combat's flight alone,
That heroes lives are long enthroned.

So think not now of hills of sod,
Nor of long, weary fathoms trod,
But look to blue skies thoughtfully
And think about the world to be.
